And if you have your own desktop or laptop computer and have access to an Internet connection, check out the many online photo editors and see what they can do. Moscow (AFP) - Russia has put a US soldier and contractor on trial for spying and eavesdropping on a spy plane being flown over North Korea, after previously dismissing accusations of hacking as "joke". A Russian judge on Saturday began a trial of the US soldier, Robert Harry Murry, and a contractor accused of intercepting communications during the flight of the USAF's RQ-4A "Global Hawk" spy plane over the far east on November 15. The Russian city of Vladivostok where the Global Hawk was based is a known base for electronic espionage and a major node for weapons sales by the United States to North Korea. The alleged breaches of the plane's security were classified as "gross negligence" by the North's state-run KCNA news agency. The head of the Russian military intelligence agency GRU -- the same organization reportedly behind the November 4 nerve gas attack on former double agent Sergei Skripal and his daughter in southern England -- said the alleged espionage had no bearing on military issues. "There is no evidence that these communications have any link to Russian military," Alexei Pushkov wrote on Twitter. He also dismissed a report that the spying could have been a move to gather data on the military capabilities of North Korea as "nonsense." "The opposition forces in Syria have gone to any length to get military information on the capabilities of the Syrian army," he wrote on Facebook. Commander Igor Konashenkov, also a deputy chief of the GRU, said Murry's trial began on Friday after the soldier, who is also a Russian citizen, was extradited from the United States. "The measure was taken after evidence was brought up that he was in the United States and had recorded confidential communications aboard the Global Hawk," Konashenkov said. The second defendant, Edward Gallagher, a private contractor and former Navy SEAL, was extradited from Iraq on Thursday. Konashenkov denied the trial was a show trial, saying it was in compliance with the law. He also said the two had confessed to the allegations, but he did not provide any evidence of their guilt. The legal claims against Murry were based on earlier accusations of spying, including hacking into the military's computer systems. Murry was arrested in January on suspicion of stealing classified information, including a top-secret Global Hawk manual. The soldier, who has also been charged with Abstract A colourimetry method has been developed and validated for measurement of enteral feeding. A four-category colour difference scale (CDS) was used to record the colour difference between a feeding mixture containing a labelled mixture of test components and a known standard. Accuracy of the method was assessed by linear regression analysis and calculation of prediction intervals. The method was found to be precise (test-retest coefficients of variation generally $\leq 5\%$), precise (intra-day coefficients of variation $\leq 5\%$), accurate (good agreement between laboratory and field data), linear (the prediction interval contained the accepted value of zero for all test mixtures), and robust with respect to ambient light, operator-dependent factors and ageing of the samples over time. The CDS was further tested for use in a pilot study on colour matching and consumer acceptability of labelled commercial cow's milk-based enteral feeding mixtures to homemade products. In this context, the differences in consumer taste preferences and preferences for the colour of commercial mixtures and homemade mixtures was assessed by means of a survey. Finally, an open-ended colour description study was performed in which participants were asked to document the appearance of homemade mixtures.// Copyright (c) 2005 DMTF.
